Abstract

Social media has profoundly changed the experience of how Palestinian young people communicate in Australia. My intention is to explore how social media influences 'traditional' Palestinian culture for this cohort of young people who are prolific users of these communication platforms. Much of the research emphasis on 'digital diaspora's' has focussed on political activism and the development of national identities. This project, a mixed-methods case study will add to the existing body of knowledge by offering new understandings of both Palestinian culture, and why exiled groups of young people engage with social media.
