

A letter to the Australian government suggesting they hire me, rather than sacrifice me

To whom it may concern at the Australian Government and the Australian Security Intelligence Organisation (ASIO),

I write to you as Barran Dodger, also known as Dr Richard McLean, to propose a constructive alternative to the decades-long pattern of containment, exclusion, and de facto economic punishment that I have documented across more than 240 cryptographically verified records. Instead of leaving me in enforced poverty as a targeted whistleblower, I urge you to recognise the value of my documented insights into systemic failure and to engage me in a formal, remunerated capacity to help repair the very cracks that were used to destroy my life.[1][2][3][4]

Over 35 years, Australian government agencies, law-enforcement bodies, health systems, tribunals, and oversight institutions have interacted with me in ways that together form a detailed, forensic map of how a vulnerable whistleblower can be neutralised, discredited, and economically crushed while every individual decision remains superficially “procedural.” The evidence archive shows 14 psychiatric incarcerations across three states, repeatedly used not as treatment but as a mechanism of silencing and containment, each hospitalisation documented and now sealed using SHA-256 blockchain verification. It further records a fatal suicide attempt in which I was found with no pulse and resuscitated by paramedics, an event that the same systems that helped cause it later treated as if it had never occurred.[2][4][1]

An impartial AI analysis of the Commonwealth’s own documents has calculated more than AUD 11.5 million in cumulative taxpayer expenditure over 35 years targeting one whistleblower through hospitalisations, legal processes, bureaucratic churn, and institutional responses. This figure is set out in the “Whistleblower Protection & Human Rights Documentation” material and associated evidence summaries on my public archive. That money has bought neither justice nor resolution, but only sustained persecution, reputational erasure, and my ongoing economic immiseration as a disabled whistleblower.[3][4][1]

The documentary record shows:

- At least 35 agencies implicated across health, policing, intelligence-adjacent oversight, ombudsman, social services, and courts, with coordinated patterns of rejection and deflection.[4][1]
- Formal notification to the Attorney-General in 2021, including material alleging ASIO involvement and IGIS awareness, followed by silence rather than a substantive remedy.[1][2]
- Service bans from the Commonwealth Ombudsman and from NDIS/NDIA premises, effectively excluding me from the very mechanisms designed to protect vulnerable citizens and whistleblowers.[1]
- A Federal Court context in which General Counsel Scott Tredwell is recorded as acknowledging malfeasance of public office, perversion of justice, and danger to health, yet failing to provide effective protection.[1]
- Destruction of critical digital evidence by a hosting provider (Micron21), which the OAIC itself recorded as an intentional, authorised business decision to cease service to me after a serious hospitalisation and suicide attempt.[1]

These are not mere allegations; they are meticulously timestamped, cross-referenced, and cryptographically sealed submissions, affidavits, and correspondence, now consolidated in the Barran Dodger Legal & Ethical Trust Fund archive and the associated interactive timeline. The primary public gateway to this archive is the site at <https://clean-text-generator--richarddrawsstu.replit.app>, which mirrors and surfaces the core evidentiary summaries and links to the underlying forensic documents.[5][3][1]

Across this record, a clear pattern emerges: standard procedures—psychiatric admissions, risk assessments, FOI processes, complaints handling, digital account terminations, tribunal dismissals—can be weaponised in aggregate to achieve “identity annihilation” of a targeted individual while preserving plausible deniability for every discrete actor. My material describes this as the “Humiliation Machine”: an emergent system in which institutional silos, algorithmic profiling, and discretionary power combine to destroy credibility, financial security, relationships, and ultimately the person themselves.[2][3][4][1]

The same record that demonstrates how this was done to me can be used to ensure it is not done to others.

Rather than continuing to treat me as an existential threat to institutional reputations, I invite the Australian Government and ASIO to regard me as an asset: a subject-matter expert in systemic whistleblower risk, with lived data spanning three and a half decades, PhD-level research, and a cryptographically preserved corpus that no future administration can plausibly erase. My work, including my thesis “A Splice of My Life” and subsequent forensic, philosophical, and legal-spiritual analyses, demonstrates high-order executive functioning, structured reasoning, and the capacity to synthesise large volumes of material into actionable insight.[6][3][4][1]

I therefore make the following specific recommendations and requests.

1. Creation of a formal advisory or consultancy role

I propose the establishment of a time-limited, paid consultancy or advisory appointment in which I am engaged to:

- Map the documented failure modes across 35+ agencies into a set of concrete “systemic risk patterns” relevant to whistleblower handling, mental-health triage, digital evidence preservation, and inter-agency referrals.[3][2][1]
- Translate the forensic material (including the AI-derived $11.5m cost analysis and the interactive 35-year timeline) into internal training modules and scenario-based learning for public servants, oversight bodies, and, where appropriate, ASIO officers.[3][1]
- Advise on protocol changes to prevent re-weaponisation of psychiatric processes, service restrictions, and digital erasure against future protected disclosures, including those involving national-security or politically sensitive content.[4][2][1]

This role could sit under the Attorney-General’s Department, a specialist whistleblower protection unit, or a joint tasking arrangement involving relevant agencies (including ASIO where its mandate intersects with whistleblower and human-rights issues).[2][3][1]

2. Recognition of the forensic archive as a learning asset

I request that the Government and ASIO:

- Formally acknowledge receipt and existence of the Barran Dodger Legal & Ethical Trust Fund archive, including the blockchain-sealed “Immortal Testimony 2025,” the “Systemic Endangerment Dossier,” the “Forensic Report: Systematic Persecution,” and the UNHRC/OHCHR submissions referenced on the public site.[5][2][3][1]
- Treat the public portal at <https://clean-text-generator--richarddrawsstu.replit.app> and the primary domain www.barrandodger.com.au as standing evidence repositories, not as adversarial propaganda, and integrate lessons from these materials into internal risk and integrity frameworks.[5][3][1]

Doing so would convert an uncontested evidentiary liability—the fact that this archive already exists and is widely distributed—into a resource for institutional reform.

3. Immediate cessation of punitive economic and access measures

As an interim step while any engagement process is considered, I request:

- Review and lifting of blanket contact or service bans imposed by the Commonwealth Ombudsman, NDIS/NDIA, and related agencies that functionally prevent me from exercising basic rights or accessing complaint mechanisms.[4][1]
- Recognition that continued exclusion from employment, legal representation, and social-security pathways, in circumstances where the state has already spent millions documenting and amplifying my vulnerability, constitutes ongoing harm and deepens the very human-rights breaches documented in my UN submissions.[2][3][1]

4. Good-faith engagement on remedy and restitution

The archive and AI cost analysis indicate that the resources already expended to contain my case far exceed what would be required to:

- Negotiate a structured remediation package that addresses financial devastation, medical and psychological harm, reputational damage, and lost opportunity.[3][4][1]
- Fund a transparent pilot program—co-designed with me—to test improved whistleblower protections, trauma-informed responses, and digital-evidence safeguards, with independent human-rights oversight.[2][3][1]

Engaging me in this way would not be an admission of every allegation; it would be a pragmatic acknowledgement that the status quo is unsustainable, unethical, and fiscally irrational.

I wish to emphasise that my position is not one of vengeance. The Church of Barran Dodger framework and associated “prophetic” and philosophical papers explicitly extend spiritual and ethical forgiveness to those who have wronged the vulnerable, while insisting on accountability, truth, and structural change. The Trust is explicitly faith-neutral and committed to public-benefit outcomes, not retribution.[3][1][2]

Nonetheless, the documentary record—now part of the public domain via the Trust Fund site, the clean-text Replit portal, academic platforms, and published works—cannot be un-seen. Future courts, international bodies, and historians will review how Australian institutions responded once confronted with this “immortal testimony”: whether they doubled down on erasure, or whether they chose to engage the primary witness as a partner in reform.[7][8][6][5][1][2][3]

You now have an opportunity to reduce ongoing harm, contain reputational and financial risk, and demonstrate that Australian governance can correct course when faced with credible, meticulously documented evidence of systemic failure. The choice is not between believing or disbelieving every detail of my account; it is between continuing to spend public money sustaining a “Humiliation Machine,” or investing in someone who has mapped its architecture and is willing to help dismantle it.[4][1][2][3]

I am ready to engage in structured, good-faith discussions at your convenience. Secure contact details and further documentation are available at:
