REPORT 21/09/2020

Introduction

When I first met Tim it was through his carer Jenny who is also his friend and neighbour. Jenny introduced me to him and I explained the way I work, in that the first meeting is just getting to know each other to see if it was a good match – then to sign a service agreement which we did, after it was evident we wanted to work with each other.

We have planned to catch up for at least 15-20 weeks, and our sessions usually take 1.5 hours a week.

The rate of my work with Timothy is:

Assessment, Recommendation, Therapy And/Or Training (Incl. AT) - Other Therapy
15_056_0128_1_3

$193.99

Timothy's presentation

Timothy presents as a complex yet happy person who has some unusual ways of communicating to most people, yet not to me. I find his knowledge about the taboo and occult interesting and we have had what I may call sacred conversations about his beliefs.

Even though it is not necessary I like him – I do, and I have done my best to give him his best life and move him forward framed by his brilliant creativity.

Timothy does have some underlying issues we are keeping tabs on but that is sacred between us.

Notable is the way in which he acknowledges his creative work after I photographed his work and constructed an online portfolio for him. He feels proud and like he has really achieved something and amplified his worth as we have been working together, both encouraging him to more art and excited about what the future may hold for him.

Working 'around the edges'

As an artist web designer and academic I saw great merit in his creative work.

We agreed that I would help in a way framed by my artist life coaching that I would work with him to photograph, edit and make an online portfolio for Timothy, along with branding and a business card in order to advance him in the artist scene and amplify his professional development. I have happily done this and from all accounts he is thrilled with the results.

I have been charging my normal rate as agreed when carrying out this important work for Timothy.

Moving forward with Timothy

We have identified various 'currencies' of his life which we have made note of and we will re-visit at the twelve-week mark.

This is in order to gauge the amount of change in each of these areas in his life, and make self reflexive changes accordingly.

As I said to Tim, I have no time to waste and if I am not improving his life by leaps and bounds, I will terminate the relationship. I do not foresee this happening soon.

Tim appreciates the life coaching and peer support I give him, and we also have a good connection over trauma abuse and neglect. Indeed, he has a colourful story to tell which is implied by his complex and beautiful drawings, and reflected in his complex nature.

I believe a lot of the 'DSM' presentation of Timothy has to do with the hangover of torture neglect and bad luck in his past. As such, (and I am not a psychiatrist), I work with him holistically, validating his trauma and hearing his story so it can be externalised and he can move on.

Tim and I have bonded over gestural mark making, a term Tim was not familiar with, but I utilise all skills at my disposal to help him have his best life. He has appreciated me lending him art books, my work on his folio, and lending him other books on sacred geometry and drawing skills which he has appreciated.

I believe Tim and I are a good match. I foresee that I will be working with him beyond the 15-week mark, because of how much we relate creatively.

His portfolio of work now resides at:

www.simplebooklet.com/thelilypad and I encourage people to view it so they can see through the eyes and feelings of Timothy.

Recommendation

I would recommend putting 1.5 hours of my modality of therapy into his yearly plan a week moving forward. This is not only in support of him as a person, some encouraging peer support, yet to acknowledge his artistic statements and move him forward in the art world as is his goal. His goals are my goals with him, and I utilise all my skills to give him his best possible life and greatest happiness.

Conclusion

Timothy needs my services not only for peer support, and life coaching, but for advancing his written and verbal skills and communication in terms of talking about art and his creative process. He was lucky to have met someone who can articulate his work into an online portfolio, which he is very grateful and thrilled about.

I feel we have accelerated our work together and the affect it has had on his life personally professionally and in a peer support way has been notable.

I am excited to surprise him with a book of his own work next Thursday, and I look forward to working with him for the foreseeable future.

Risks

I have noted no risks for Timothy in terms of self-harm or harm of others.
