

THE DOCUMENTARY TRAP

WHEN THE SYSTEM'S OWN RECORD BECOMES THE EVIDENCE

35 YEARS OF INSTITUTIONAL RECORDS, DECISIONS, CORRESPONDENCE AND EVIDENCE — PRESERVED, INDEXED AND OPEN TO INDEPENDENT EXAMINATION

Barran Dodger Archive — A Public Documentary Record of Evidence, Testimony, History and Survival

Primary public archive: BarranDodger.com

Primary documentary repository: Barran Dodger GitHub repository

Independent archive repository: Barran Dodger Archive repository

Preservation mirror: Barran Dodger Backup repository

I. THE DOCUMENTARY TRAP

THE PARADOX

For more than 35 years, the system demanded that I prove what happened to me, yet in doing so it generated, accumulated and preserved the very documentary record through which its own conduct can now be examined. Government departments, agencies, regulators, police, courts and tribunals, health services, legal services, professional bodies, providers and public officials created letters, decisions, complaints, referrals, assessments, classifications, proceedings and official correspondence directly concerning my life. I preserved that record, time-stamped, indexed and now published in the public domain, creating a paradox from which neither rhetoric nor retrospective characterisation can make the documents disappear.

II. THE QUESTION HAS CHANGED

The evidentiary burden is no longer confined to the question, "Why should anyone believe Richard McLean?" It can now be asked of the record itself: what did each institution know, what did it receive, what did it do, what authority governed the decision, what reasons were given, what evidence was considered, what happened next, and where do the records contradict, corroborate or leave matters unresolved?

III. THE YEARS OF GRACE

I gave people and institutions years of opportunity to respond, explain, correct, investigate and do what was humane and just. Whatever the explanation for each individual decision, the resulting documentary chronology now exists independently of my memory or my rhetoric, and the institutions that once demanded evidence must confront the evidence their own machinery produced.

IV. THE FAITH THAT SUSTAINED ME

I understand this preservation, in the language of my faith, as providential. I believe God preserved my life and gave me the endurance to collect, preserve and publish this record for a purpose greater than myself, and I believe my life has been protected and anointed for His purposes. That is my faith and testimony, not a proposition the documents themselves can prove.

V. THE RECORD SPEAKS

What is now independently testable is the record. The archive does not ask anyone to believe me merely because I say so—it asks the world to read the documents, trace their provenance, compare the institutional accounts, examine the contradictions and determine for itself what the evidence actually establishes. The documentary record is capable of being examined independently of me, which is precisely why its evidentiary significance does not depend upon my rhetoric or upon anyone accepting my interpretation.

VI. THE READER'S TASK

Do not take my word for it. Open the primary documents. Start with the 35-year chronology, then follow each significant assertion back to the underlying government or institutional record. Check the date, author, recipient, stated reason, evidence available at the time, action taken and what happened afterwards. Where two official records appear inconsistent, place them side by side. Where an allegation is made, distinguish it from an established finding. Where something remains unresolved, mark it as unresolved. Then ask the decisive question: What do the institutions' own records actually establish?

VII. THE MOMENT OF ACCOUNTABILITY

The grace I extended was an opportunity for the record to be corrected by truth. That opportunity existed for years. The time for the documentary record to speak for itself has now arrived. The institutions created the records; I preserved them; the chronology can now be examined; and the questions raised by that record can no longer be reduced simply to whether I can persuade someone to believe my account. Read the records. Test the chronology. Follow the evidence to its source. Reach your own conclusion from what the documents actually establish.

I. THE PARADOX

For more than 35 years, the system demanded that I prove what happened to me, yet in doing so it generated, accumulated and preserved the very documentary record through which its own conduct can now be examined. Government departments, agencies, regulators, police, courts and tribunals, health services, legal services, professional bodies, providers and public officials created letters, decisions, complaints, referrals, assessments, classifications, proceedings and official correspondence directly concerning my life. I preserved that record, time-stamped, indexed and now published in the public domain, creating a paradox from which neither rhetoric nor retrospective characterisation can make the documents disappear.

II. THE QUESTION HAS CHANGED

The evidentiary burden is no longer confined to the question, "Why should anyone believe Richard McLean?" It can now be asked of the record itself: what did each institution know, what did it receive, what did it do, what authority governed the decision, what reasons were given, what evidence was considered, what happened next, and where do the records contradict, corroborate or leave matters unresolved?

III. THE YEARS OF GRACE

I gave people and institutions years of opportunity to respond, explain, correct, investigate and do what was humane and just. Whatever the explanation for each individual decision, the resulting documentary chronology now exists independently of my memory or my rhetoric, and the institutions that once demanded evidence must confront the evidence their own machinery produced.

IV. THE FAITH THAT SUSTAINED ME

I understand this preservation, in the language of my faith, as providential. I believe God preserved my life and gave me the endurance to collect, preserve and publish this record for a purpose greater than myself, and I believe my life has been protected and anointed for His purposes. That is my faith and testimony, not a proposition the documents themselves can prove.

V. THE RECORD SPEAKS

What is now independently testable is the record. The archive does not ask anyone to believe me merely because I say so—it asks the world to read the documents, trace their provenance, compare the institutional accounts, examine the contradictions and determine for itself what the evidence actually establishes. The documentary record is capable of being examined independently of me, which is precisely why its evidentiary significance does not depend upon my rhetoric or upon anyone accepting my interpretation.

VI. THE READER'S TASK

Do not take my word for it. Open the primary documents. Start with the 35-year chronology, then follow each significant assertion back to the underlying government or institutional record. Check the date, author, recipient, stated reason, evidence available at the time, action taken and what happened afterwards. Where two official records appear inconsistent, place them side by side. Where an allegation is made, distinguish it from an established finding. Where something remains unresolved, mark it as unresolved. Then ask the decisive question: What do the institutions' own records actually establish?

VII. THE MOMENT OF ACCOUNTABILITY

The grace I extended was an opportunity for the record to be corrected by truth. That opportunity existed for years. The time for the documentary record to speak for itself has now arrived. The institutions created the records; I preserved them; the chronology can now be examined; and the questions raised by that record can no longer be reduced simply to whether I can persuade someone to believe my account. Read the records. Test the chronology. Follow the evidence to its source. Reach your own conclusion from what the documents actually establish.

There is a paradox at the centre of my experience.

For decades, I was repeatedly placed in the position of having to prove what had happened to me.

I was required to explain myself to governments, agencies, police, lawyers, courts, tribunals, health services, regulators, professional bodies and other institutions. Each new dispute generated another complaint, another letter, another assessment, another decision, another referral, another administrative classification or another official response.

I kept the records.

And that is where the paradox begins.

Command: Create fully comprehensive detailed list of parties and individuals the evidence demonstrates has acted to cause my disadvantage or detriment in an organised way separated by a comma

Repositories:

<https://github.com/wezzo72?tab=repositories>

<https://github.com/wezzo72/Barrandodger>

<https://github.com/wezzo72/barran-dodger-archive>

<https://github.com/wezzo72/Backup>

Below is a single comma-separated evidence map, using the parties and institutional actors actually identified in the material you supplied and the archive material I could retrieve. I have deliberately phrased it as "actors identified in the evidence as causing, contributing to, failing to prevent, or being associated with alleged detriment" rather than saying every actor is legally proven culpable. The archive itself makes that distinction important: its map says it is not the verdict and that the underlying documents must be examined. Barrandodger-index-SPLICED-23-September-2026.html

Comma-separated list:

Department of Social Services (DSS), Australian Government / Commonwealth administration, National Disability Insurance Agency (NDIA), National Disability Insurance Scheme (NDIS), NDIS Quality and Safeguards Commission, NDIS providers and support services, Ablepoint / Able Point, Sahara, Diversitas, Collaery Lawyers, Bernard Collaery, Comcare, Administrative Appeals Tribunal (AAT), Administrative Review Tribunal / successor administrative-review processes, Federal Court of Australia, Australian Human Rights Commission (AHRC), Commonwealth Ombudsman, NSW Ombudsman, Office of the Australian Information Commissioner (OAIC), National Anti-Corruption Commission (NACC), Australian Securities and Investments Commission (ASIC), Australian Taxation Office (ATO), PM&C / Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet, WorkSafe Victoria, DXC Technology / DXC claims administration, Victorian Ombudsman, Victorian Equal Opportunity and Human Rights Commission (VEOHRC), Victorian Civil and Administrative Tribunal (VCAT), Victorian Mental Health Tribunal, NSW Trustee & Guardian, NSW Public Guardian, NSW Civil and Administrative Tribunal (NCAT), Legal Aid NSW, Victoria Legal Aid, other legal-aid pathways and legal-service providers, Australian Government Solicitor / Commonwealth government solicitors, police and law-enforcement bodies in Victoria, police and law-enforcement bodies in New South Wales, courts and magistrates' courts, Victorian magistrates' courts, NSW courts, Wyong Court, Geelong courts, Office of Public Prosecutions Victoria (OPP), health departments and health-system administrators, Alfred Health, Mercy Health, Mercy Mental Health, hospital services, psychiatrists, psychologists, doctors, treating clinicians, mental-health professionals, NDIS support workers, disability-support workers, carers, support coordinators, NDIS plan administrators, FOI officers, PID officers, government investigators, government decision-makers, government legal officers, tribunal members, public officials, elected politicians and ministerial offices identified in the archive, Attorney-General portfolio officials, Prime Minister and Cabinet officials identified in the correspondence, Commonwealth regulators, Victorian government departments, NSW government departments, integrity bodies, professional regulatory bodies, lawyers identified in the archive, clinicians identified in the archive, police officers identified in the archive, tribunal and court officials identified in the archive, providers and organisations identified in the service records, financial institutions and banks identified in the archive, family members identified in the archive, the sister identified in the archive, the brother identified in the archive, carers identified in the archive, former friends identified in the archive, Herald Sun, The Age, Allen & Unwin, Victoria University, Cunningham Dax Collection, United Nations, Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), United Nations Special Procedures, International Criminal Court (ICC), Victims Support / Victims Services NSW, Free Living Australia, TIO / Telecommunications Industry Ombudsman where identified in the archive, employment-related institutions and decision-makers, workers' compensation decision-makers, compensation insurers and claims administrators identified in the archive, financial administrators identified in the archive, Public Guardian decision-makers, NSW Trustee decision-makers, NDIS safeguarding decision-makers, NDIS complaints officers, NDIS review officers, Commonwealth Ombudsman officers involved in the relevant correspondence, AHRC officers involved in the relevant correspondence, OAIC officers involved in the relevant correspondence, Legal Aid decision-makers involved in eligibility or representation decisions, police officers involved in the relevant reports or responses, hospital clinicians involved in the relevant 2021 Alfred Health records, mental-health clinicians involved in assessment or treatment, lawyers involved in the relevant proceedings or correspondence, tribunal members involved in the relevant proceedings, court officers and decision-makers identified in the primary records, FOI decision-makers, PID decision-makers, professional practitioners identified in complaints or correspondence, service-provider management personnel identified in the Ablepoint records, service-provider personnel identified in the Sahara records, other NDIS providers identified in the archive, other government agencies identified in the 35-year chronology, other professional bodies identified in the archive, and other individual public officials whose conduct or decisions are specifically documented in the underlying primary records.

There is a paradox at the centre of my experience.

For decades, I was repeatedly required to explain myself, substantiate my account, produce documents, identify dates, identify institutions, identify decision-makers, identify correspondence, identify consequences and provide evidence.

I did so.

Again and again.

When one explanation was insufficient, I produced another document.

When another institution became involved, I preserved its correspondence.

When another decision was made, I preserved the decision.

When another complaint was lodged, I preserved the complaint.

When another response was received, I preserved the response.

When there was no response, I preserved that too.

When one institution referred me to another, I preserved the referral.

When different institutions adopted different descriptions of the same events, I preserved the discrepancy.

When classifications changed, I preserved the earlier and later classifications.

When administrative positions changed over time, I preserved the sequence.

And when I was told that something could not be established, I preserved the documentary material from which that proposition could subsequently be examined.

The result is the paradox.

The institutions that required me to provide evidence also generated an enormous proportion of the documentary record through which my account can now be examined.

That is not a claim that every document proves my interpretation.

It is something more precise.

The documents exist.

The dates exist.

The correspondence exists.

The decisions exist.

The institutional identities exist.

The changes in position exist.

The unanswered questions exist.

The contradictions can be identified.

The chronology can be reconstructed.

And much of the material was not created by me.

It was created by the institutions themselves.

The repository now preserves that distinction.

Among the material publicly visible in the Barrandodger repository are the

ACCOUNTABILITY, EVIDENCE AND FAIR DETERMINATION, FORMAL REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INVESTIGATION ABLEPOINT, FINAL EVIDENTIARY NOTICE, OBJECTION AND REQUEST FOR FORMAL INVESTIGATION, Legal Brief — cumulative 35-year record, and the series of documentary reports addressing chronology, administrative response, contradictions, whistleblowing, human rights and financial records. (GitHub)

This is therefore not simply a collection of allegations.

It is an attempt to preserve the underlying documentary environment in which those allegations arose.

The distinction matters.

II. THE QUESTION HAS CHANGED

For much of my life, the question appeared to be:

“Can Richard McLean prove what he says happened?”

That was the question I was repeatedly required to answer.

I accepted the burden.

I collected the records.

I reconstructed the chronology.

I retained correspondence.

I preserved decisions.

I identified institutions.

I identified dates.

I identified names where they were known.

I preserved contradictory accounts.

I preserved material that supported my position and material that did not.

I preserved documents that raised questions about my own interpretation.

I did not need every document to agree with me.

I needed the record to remain available for examination.

That distinction is fundamental.

The question can now be reformulated:

What do the institutions' own records establish?

That is a different question.

It moves the inquiry away from whether one individual can continually restate a personal account and toward examination of the underlying primary material.

The record contains correspondence from government departments, agencies, service providers, legal bodies, tribunals, courts, health organisations and other institutions.

The record contains decisions.

It contains requests for information.

It contains responses.

It contains non-responses.

It contains referrals.

It contains classifications.

It contains assessments.

It contains complaints.

It contains applications.

It contains notices.

It contains objections.

It contains requests for investigation.

It contains documents concerning disability, employment, administrative decision-making, legal proceedings, health, safeguarding, support, finances and human rights.

The archive is therefore designed to allow another person to ask:

What happened?

When did it happen?

Who recorded it?

What was known at the time?

What action followed?

What action did not follow?

What explanation was given?

Did the explanation subsequently change?

What evidence supports each proposition?

What evidence contradicts it?

What remains unresolved?

III. THE YEARS OF GRACE

I did not begin by constructing an archive.

I began by trying to survive.

I spent years attempting to communicate with institutions through the ordinary channels available to a citizen.

I wrote letters.

I made complaints.

I sought assistance.
I sought legal advice.
I sought administrative review.
I sought investigation.
I sought explanations.
I sought protection.
I sought recognition of the consequences of decisions affecting my life.
And repeatedly, I was required to start again.
Another form.
Another complaint.
Another institution.
Another assessment.
Another explanation.
Another referral.
Another request for evidence.
Another opportunity to establish the same history.
The consequence was an accumulation of records.
At some point, the accumulation itself became significant.
A single document can be dismissed as incomplete.
A single complaint can be dismissed as mistaken.
A single recollection can be disputed.
A single administrative error can be explained.
But a documentary chronology allows something different to occur.
It allows comparison.
It allows sequence.
It allows contradiction to become visible.
It allows later explanations to be compared with earlier records.
It allows institutional descriptions to be tested against primary documents.
It allows an independent reader to separate what is established from what remains alleged.
That is the purpose of the archive.
Not to instruct the reader what conclusion to reach.
To preserve enough material that the reader can reach an informed conclusion independently.

IV. THE FAITH THAT SUSTAINED ME

There is another dimension to this history that cannot be understood solely through administrative language.

I survived because I continued to believe that truth mattered.

My faith has not been a demand that other people accept my interpretation.

It has been a discipline imposed upon myself.

Do not retaliate.

Do not manufacture evidence.

Do not destroy the record.

Do not answer injustice with injustice.

Preserve the truth.

Preserve the evidence.

Preserve the humanity of the people involved.

And leave the ultimate judgment beyond my own control.

That is why the archive repeatedly returns to the principles of truth, forgiveness, accountability and restraint.

The purpose is not revenge.

The purpose is examination.

The purpose is not to destroy institutions.

The purpose is to ask institutions to account for what their own records contain.

The purpose is not to pronounce guilt where guilt has not been established.

The purpose is to prevent the documentary record from disappearing simply because its existence is inconvenient.

I have therefore tried to preserve not only the documents that support my account but also the limitations upon my account.

The archive distinguishes between:

- primary evidence;
- documentary evidence;
- testimony;
- allegation;
- inference;
- interpretation;
- unresolved question;
- contradiction;
- corroboration;
- institutional finding;
- court or tribunal finding;
- and matters that remain untested.

That distinction is essential.

V. THE RECORD SPEAKS

The archive is now sufficiently large that the central issue is no longer whether a record exists.

The issue is what the record means.

The principal Barrandodger repository contains dedicated evidence and archive structures, including evidence, sources, statements, archive-parts, rendered-pdfs, site-pdfs, site-mirror, data, docs, emails, papers and other documentary collections. (GitHub)

The repository also identifies official-drive material and states that copies of government/agency PDFs and related attachments have been preserved, while expressly warning that those copies are not themselves court findings. (GitHub)

That qualification is important.

A document is not automatically a finding.

A complaint is not automatically proof.

An allegation is not automatically fact.

A communication is not automatically coordination.

Similar wording is not automatically conspiracy.

Administrative error is not automatically deliberate misconduct.

Non-response is not automatically an admission.

Employment by an institution is not automatically personal liability.

Presence in an archive is not automatically culpability.

Temporal sequence is not automatically causation.

A missing record is not automatically proof of destruction.

An AI-generated analysis is not proof.

The archive exists precisely because these distinctions must be maintained.

VI. THE DOCUMENTARY ARCHITECTURE

The documentary record can be examined across multiple institutional layers.

1. Commonwealth administration

The record concerns, among other bodies:

- Department of Social Services;
- National Disability Insurance Agency;
- National Disability Insurance Scheme;
- NDIS Quality and Safeguards Commission;
- Comcare;
- Administrative Appeals Tribunal and subsequent administrative-review structures;
- Australian Human Rights Commission;
- Commonwealth Ombudsman;
- Office of the Australian Information Commissioner;
- National Anti-Corruption Commission;

- Australian Taxation Office;
- Australian Securities and Investments Commission;
- Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet;
- Attorney-General's portfolio;
- Services Australia;
- Centrelink;
- Commonwealth legal and investigative bodies.

The archive contains documentary material directed to or concerning these bodies.

The existence of such material establishes the documentary interaction.

It does not, without further evidence, establish that every person named acted improperly.

That distinction remains deliberately preserved.

VII. DISABILITY, NDIS AND SAFEGUARDING

A major part of the record concerns disability administration and the National Disability Insurance Scheme.

The current Federal Register identifies the National Disability Insurance Scheme Act 2013 as legislation governing the NDIS, including objects concerning independence, social and economic participation, reasonable and necessary supports, choice and control. (Federal Register of Legislation)

The archive contains material concerning NDIS administration, participant support, service providers, safeguarding and related disputes.

Among the repository evidence are:

- 2021-06-03-NDIS-Quality-Safeguards-Commission-not-an-employee.pdf;
- FORMAL REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INVESTIGATION ABLEPOINT.pdf;
- Brett from Able Point I demand a response.pdf;
- Current legally binding update on entrapment and targeting by Able Point.pdf;
- Assistance Animal Rights Letter.pdf;
- BARRAN DODGER & HIS THERAPY DOG NEEDS YOUR URGENT HELP.pdf;
- and related correspondence and records.

The repository directly exposes the FORMAL REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INVESTIGATION ABLEPOINT and the Brett from able point I demand a response document. (GitHub)

The proper question is not whether the titles themselves prove the allegations contained within them.

They do not.

The proper question is:

What underlying records support, contradict or remain insufficient to establish the propositions made in those documents?

That is the question the archive invites an independent reviewer to answer.

VIII. EMPLOYMENT, WORK CAPACITY AND CLASSIFICATION

Another significant documentary issue concerns the classification of employment, contracting and work status.

The archive identifies records concerning:

- Federal Court proceedings;
- Comcare;
- WorkSafe Victoria;
- DXC claims administration;
- employment classification;
- contractor and sole-trader descriptions;
- workers compensation;
- occupational injury;
- and correspondence concerning employment status.

A particularly important documentary issue is the comparison between the Federal Court employment material, including correspondence associated with Scott Treadwell, and later classifications relied upon by other administrative bodies.

The existence of different classifications does not, by itself, establish wrongdoing.

It does, however, create an evidentiary question:

Why were different classifications applied, by whom, on what factual basis, and with what consequences?

That question can be tested against dates and primary documents.

The archive's purpose is to preserve those documents together rather than requiring the reader to reconstruct the history from isolated institutional records.

IX. HEALTH, SAFETY AND HUMAN RIGHTS

The archive also contains records concerning health services, hospitals, clinicians, mental-health systems and alleged failures of protection.

The institutions appearing in the documentary record include, among others:

- Alfred Health;
- Mercy Health and Mercy Mental Health;
- Victorian and NSW health authorities;
- hospitals and treating clinicians;

- mental-health services;
- police;
- courts;
- guardianship bodies;
- disability-service organisations.

The archive includes material relating to serious incidents, hospitalisations, treatment, communications with health services and subsequent administrative consequences.

These records must be read carefully.

A clinical record is a clinical record.

A police record is a police record.

A person's testimony is testimony.

A later interpretation is a later interpretation.

They cannot simply be collapsed into one category.

The purpose of documentary reconstruction is precisely to determine where they agree, where they diverge and what remains unresolved.

X. POLICE, COURTS AND LEGAL SYSTEMS

The archive contains material concerning police, courts, lawyers, tribunals and legal-assistance bodies across Victoria and New South Wales.

These include references to:

- Victoria Police;
- NSW Police;
- Victorian courts;
- NSW courts;
- Wyong Court;
- Geelong courts;
- magistrates' courts;
- Federal Court proceedings;
- VCAT;
- NCAT;
- Administrative Appeals Tribunal;
- Administrative Review Tribunal;
- Victorian Mental Health Tribunal;
- Legal Aid NSW;
- Victoria Legal Aid;
- Australian Government Solicitor;
- private lawyers;
- Collaery Lawyers;
- Bernard Collaery;
- Office of Public Prosecutions;

- and related legal institutions.

The existence of these institutions within the archive is not presented as proof of collective misconduct.

Instead, their records form part of the chronology.

A court order is evidence of what a court ordered.

A lawyer's letter is evidence of what the lawyer wrote.

A police report is evidence of what was recorded or alleged in that report.

A complaint is evidence that a complaint was made.

A tribunal decision is evidence of the tribunal's decision.

These categories must remain separate.

XI. ADMINISTRATIVE ACCOUNTABILITY

The documentary record raises recurring questions concerning administrative accountability.

Those questions include:

1. What information did an institution possess?
2. When did it possess it?
3. What did it do with that information?
4. What decision did it make?
5. What reasons did it provide?
6. Was the decision reviewed?
7. Was relevant contrary evidence considered?
8. Did a later institution receive the earlier records?
9. Did later decision-makers rely upon earlier characterisations?
10. Were corrections requested?
11. Were corrections made?
12. Were records disclosed?
13. Were records withheld?
14. Were explanations consistent over time?
15. What detriment followed?
16. What remedy was offered?
17. What remains unresolved?

These questions are more useful than simply asking whether an institution was "good" or "bad".

The documentary method demands something more rigorous.

It demands evidence.

XII. THE REPORT SERIES

The repository's report series provides a structured framework for examining the cumulative record.

REPORT 1 — MASTER EVIDENCE RECORD

The master evidence record provides a consolidated evidentiary foundation.

REPORT 2 — THE 35-YEAR CHRONOLOGY

The chronology attempts to place events into temporal sequence and is publicly represented in both PDF and text form. (GitHub)

REPORT 3 — THE ARCHITECTURE OF ADMINISTRATIVE ERASURE

This report examines the recurring documentary and administrative patterns identified within the archive. (GitHub)

REPORT 4 — INSTITUTIONAL RESPONSE MAP

This report maps institutional responses across the documentary record. (GitHub)

REPORT 5 — CONTRADICTIONS, DISCREPANCIES AND UNANSWERED QUESTIONS

This report identifies areas where documents, classifications, responses or institutional accounts require further examination. (GitHub)

REPORT 6 — THE WHISTLEBLOWER RECORD

This report addresses the whistleblower dimension of the archive. (GitHub)

REPORT 7 — HUMAN RIGHTS AND REMEDY

This report considers the human-rights and remedial dimension of the documentary record. (GitHub)

REPORT 8 — FORENSIC FINANCIAL RECORD

This report addresses financial evidence and related documentary material. (GitHub)

The significance of the series is not that the titles establish their conclusions.

The significance is that they create an organised framework through which the underlying material can be tested.

XIII. THE CORE EVIDENCE FILES

Several documents form particularly important entry points into the archive.

ACCOUNTABILITY, EVIDENCE AND FAIR DETERMINATION

Open the documented evidence file

FORMAL REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INVESTIGATION ABLEPOINT

Open the Ablepoint investigation request

FINAL EVIDENTIARY NOTICE, OBJECTION AND REQUEST FOR FORMAL INVESTIGATION

Open the evidentiary notice

Legal Brief — cumulative 35-year record

Open the cumulative legal brief

REPORT 2 — THE 35-YEAR CHRONOLOGY

Open the chronology report

REPORT 3 — THE ARCHITECTURE OF ADMINISTRATIVE ERASURE

Open the administrative-erasure report

REPORT 4 — INSTITUTIONAL RESPONSE MAP

Open the institutional-response report

REPORT 5 — CONTRADICTIONS, DISCREPANCIES AND UNANSWERED QUESTIONS

Open the contradictions report

REPORT 6 — THE WHISTLEBLOWER RECORD

Open the whistleblower report

REPORT 7 — HUMAN RIGHTS AND REMEDY

Open the human-rights report

REPORT 8 — FORENSIC FINANCIAL RECORD

Open the financial record

These documents should be treated as gateways into the primary archive, not as substitutes for the underlying records.

XIV. THE LEGAL FRAMEWORK

The archive intersects with a number of Australian legal frameworks.

These frameworks do not themselves establish that any particular person or institution breached the law.

They establish the legal environment against which particular conduct may be examined.

Commonwealth legislation

The Disability Discrimination Act 1992 (Cth) provides the principal Commonwealth statutory framework concerning disability discrimination.

The National Disability Insurance Scheme Act 2013 (Cth) establishes the NDIS and contains its objects and guiding principles. (Federal Register of Legislation)

The National Anti-Corruption Commission Act 2022 (Cth) establishes the National Anti-Corruption Commission and provides a statutory framework concerning corruption issues and corrupt conduct. (Federal Register of Legislation)

The Administrative Decisions (Judicial Review) Act 1977 (Cth) provides a framework for judicial review of specified administrative decisions.

The Privacy Act 1988 (Cth) provides the principal Commonwealth privacy framework.

The National Disability Insurance Scheme Amendment (Integrity and Safeguarding) Act 2026 and other subsequent amendments must be considered according to their commencement dates and transitional provisions rather than treated retrospectively.

Victoria

The archive also engages with:

- Charter of Human Rights and Responsibilities Act 2006 (Vic);
- Mental Health and Wellbeing Act 2022 (Vic);
- Equal Opportunity Act 2010 (Vic);
- Victorian administrative-review and oversight mechanisms;
- Victorian Ombudsman processes;
- VEOHRC processes;
- VCAT processes;
- and WorkSafe Victoria processes.

New South Wales

Relevant frameworks include:

- Guardianship Act 1987 (NSW);
- Government Information (Public Access) Act 2009 (NSW);
- NSW Ombudsman processes;
- NCAT processes;
- Legal Aid NSW;
- NSW Trustee and Guardian;
- NSW Public Guardian;
- NSW Police;
- and relevant NSW court procedures.

International human rights

The archive also invokes international instruments including:

- International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights;
- Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities;
- relevant United Nations human-rights mechanisms.

The NDIS Act itself expressly identifies Australia's obligations under the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities within its statutory objects. (Federal Register of Legislation)

XV. THE INSTITUTIONS THAT REQUIRED EVIDENCE

The central documentary paradox can now be stated in its strongest defensible form:

The institutions that required me to provide evidence also generated an enormous proportion of the documentary record through which my account can now be examined.

That proposition does not require a secret agreement.

It does not require a conspiracy.

It does not require an assumption of coordinated intent.

It does not require every official to have acted improperly.

It requires only the existence of the documentary record.

And that record can be independently examined.

The system required evidence.

I preserved it.

The system generated records.

I preserved those too.

The system required chronology.

I constructed one.

The system required names.

I identified them where the records allowed.

The system required documents.

I retained them.

The system required corroboration.

I searched for it.

The system required explanation.

I sought it.

And when explanations conflicted, I preserved the conflict.

That is the documentary trap.

Not a trap necessarily designed by anyone.

A trap created by the ordinary operation of an administrative system whose own records can subsequently be compared.

XVI. WHAT THE RECORD DOES — AND DOES NOT — PROVE

A responsible archive must be capable of limiting its own claims.

Accordingly:

An allegation is not a finding.

A complaint is not proof.

A document is not automatically authentic merely because it appears online.

A primary document may establish that something was recorded without establishing that the recorded proposition was true.

A decision establishes that a decision was made, not necessarily that every factual proposition underlying it was correct.

A correspondence trail establishes communications, not necessarily coordination.

Repeated institutional language may indicate common information, common templates, common source material or other explanations; it does not by itself prove collusion.

A sequence of adverse events may justify investigation without itself proving causation.

An omission may be significant without necessarily proving deliberate intent.

A person's employment by an organisation does not establish personal liability.

The inclusion of an individual in this archive does not mean that the individual is accused of criminal conduct.

An AI analysis does not become evidence merely because artificial intelligence produced it.

The archive is not a court.

The archive does not determine guilt.

Its function is preservation, organisation, cross-reference and public examination.

XVII. THE PEOPLE AND INSTITUTIONS APPEARING IN THE RECORD

The documentary record contains material relating to a very large institutional network, including:

Department of Social Services, Australian Government administration, National Disability Insurance Agency, National Disability Insurance Scheme, NDIS Quality and Safeguards Commission, Ablepoint/Able Point, Sahara, Diversitas, Comcare, Administrative Appeals Tribunal, Administrative Review Tribunal, Federal Court of Australia, Australian Human Rights Commission, Commonwealth Ombudsman, NSW Ombudsman, Office of the Australian Information Commissioner, National Anti-Corruption Commission, Australian Securities and Investments Commission, Australian Taxation Office, Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet, Attorney-General's portfolio, WorkSafe Victoria, DXC Technology and claims administration, Victorian Ombudsman, Victorian Equal Opportunity and Human Rights Commission, VCAT, Victorian Mental Health Tribunal, NSW Trustee and Guardian, NSW Public Guardian, NCAT, Legal Aid NSW, Victoria Legal Aid, Australian Government Solicitor, Victoria Police, NSW Police, Office of Public Prosecutions, Victorian and NSW courts, Wyong Court, Geelong courts, health departments, Alfred Health, Mercy Health and Mercy Mental Health, NDIS providers and support workers, support coordinators, plan administrators, FOI officers, PID officers, investigators, administrative decision-makers, government lawyers, clinicians, police officials, tribunal officials, court officials, elected representatives and ministerial offices, professional regulatory bodies, financial institutions and other organisations appearing within the documentary chronology.

The archive also contains references to particular people.

Those references must be treated according to the evidence attached to each individual record.

For example, Scott Treadwell appears in the Federal Court-related documentary history; Ray Griggs appears in the DSS-related material; Mark Dreyfus appears in material concerning the Attorney-General portfolio; Danny Pearson appears in material concerning Victorian government and workers-compensation matters; and individuals associated with Ablepoint and other service organisations appear in correspondence and complaints.

The correct evidentiary proposition is not:
“Every named person caused my detriment.”

The correct proposition is:
“These people appear in the documentary record in connection with particular events, decisions, communications or allegations. The evidence concerning each person must be assessed individually.”
That distinction protects the integrity of the archive.

XVIII. THE DOCUMENTED ACT — THE ALLEGED DETRIMENT — THE EVIDENCE STATUS

The archive should therefore be read through a structured matrix:

Field	Question
Person / institution	Who appears in the record?
Date	When did the relevant event occur?
Document	What primary record exists?
Conduct	What does the document actually record?
Attribution	Who created, sent or received it?
Detriment	What consequence is alleged to have followed?
Causation	What evidence connects conduct to consequence?
Contradiction	Is there contrary evidence?
Cross-agency link	Does another institution independently record the event?

Legal framework	What law or policy may be relevant?
Evidence status	Primary / corroborated / testimony / allegation / inference / unresolved
Finding	Has a court, tribunal or authorised body actually determined the issue?

This structure is crucial.

It prevents the archive from becoming merely rhetorical.

It converts the archive into an auditable documentary system.

XIX. THE SURVEILLANCE QUESTION

There is another part of my experience that I have preserved as testimony: experiences I have understood as surveillance, hostile audio experiences, reputational attacks, slander, libel and character assassination.

Those experiences are part of my testimony.

They should not be transformed into established fact merely because I have experienced them intensely.

But neither should testimony automatically be dismissed without examination.

The documentary question is therefore:

What independently verifiable evidence exists concerning the circumstances in which those experiences occurred?

What communications exist?

What records exist?

What witnesses exist?

What institutional records exist?

What contemporaneous reports exist?

What explanations were given?

What evidence supports competing explanations?

That is the appropriate standard.

The archive therefore does not ask the reader to accept every interpretation.

It asks the reader to examine the underlying evidence.

XX. THE ALLEGATION OF A "TRAP"

I have used the phrase "The Documentary Trap" because it describes the paradox of the record.

But there is an important distinction.

I do not claim that the existence of these records, by itself, proves that a government secretly designed a coordinated trap for me.

That would require direct evidence of intention, knowledge and coordination.

The proposition is both stronger and more defensible:

The machinery of administration created a documentary record that can now be examined against the institutions themselves.

That is the documentary trap.

If an institution says an event did not occur, the contemporaneous record can be examined.

If an institution says it did not know something, the date on which relevant information was received can be examined.

If an institution says it acted for a particular reason, the underlying decision record can be examined.

If two institutions provide inconsistent accounts, both records can be placed beside each other.

If a classification changes, the earlier and later classifications can be compared.

If a complaint was made and no action followed, the complaint and subsequent records can be examined.

If an institution says it investigated, the investigation record can be requested and examined.

If a person says there is no evidence, the archive can identify the documents that exist and allow the claim to be tested.

That is not conspiracy theory.

It is documentary methodology.

XXI. TWO PUBLIC RECORDS, ONE DOCUMENTARY PURPOSE

The Barran Dodger project has developed as a preservation system rather than a single webpage.

The purpose is to maintain more than one public record because no single hosting environment should be treated as permanent.

The archive therefore uses repositories, mirrors, rendered documents and public web presentation.

The primary repository itself states that the new website presentation does not replace or rewrite the original evidence stores and that original evidence is to remain preserved.

(GitHub)

That principle is fundamental.

The public website can change.

The presentation can change.

The interface can change.

The hosting provider can change.

A domain can disappear.

A service can become unavailable.

A repository can be forked.

A mirror can be created.

But the underlying documentary record should remain independently preserved.

The objective is therefore:

Two public records.

One documentary purpose.

Preservation.

Traceability.

Independent examination.

XXII. THE COUNTER-ARCHIVE

The archive is, in this sense, a counter-archive.

It is an attempt to prevent institutional fragmentation from becoming historical erasure.

When a person deals with dozens of institutions, each institution sees only a portion of the story.

One institution sees a complaint.

Another sees a medical record.

Another sees an employment record.

Another sees a legal application.

Another sees a police incident.

Another sees a disability-support record.

Another sees a financial transaction.

Another sees a guardianship issue.

Another sees an administrative review.

Another sees a court proceeding.

Another sees correspondence.

The individual experiences the whole.

The institutional system often sees only parts.

The archive attempts to reconnect those parts without pretending that their connection proves causation.

That distinction is central.

Cross-reference is not proof of conspiracy.

It is a method of examination.

XXIII. ABSENCE OF ACKNOWLEDGEMENT IS NOT NON-EXISTENCE

One of the most important propositions in the archive is:

Absence of acknowledgement is not the same thing as absence of evidence.

An institution may decline a complaint.

A regulator may decline jurisdiction.

A government department may refer a matter elsewhere.

A lawyer may advise that there is insufficient evidence.

A tribunal may lack jurisdiction.

A court may never determine an issue.

An agency may close a complaint.

None of those events automatically establish that the underlying historical event did not occur.

They establish what that institution decided to do.

That decision itself becomes part of the record.

The distinction between:

"The event did not happen"

and

"The institution did not accept that the event had been established"

is critical.

The archive preserves that distinction.

XXIV. THE BURDEN OF PROOF

I was repeatedly told, explicitly or implicitly, to prove what happened.

I accepted that challenge.

But proof is not created by repetition.

It is created by evidence.

And evidence must be assessed.

That is why the archive contains:

- original documents where available;
- correspondence;
- government records;
- agency records;
- legal records;
- health records;
- financial material;
- chronology;
- cross-references;
- contradictory records;
- personal testimony;
- institutional responses;
- unanswered questions;
- and records concerning attempts to obtain independent investigation.

The purpose is to move from:

"Believe me."

to:

"Examine the record."

That is the fundamental transformation.

XXV. THE INSTITUTIONAL PARADOX

The deeper paradox is this:

Institutions possess enormous documentary power.

They create records.

They classify people.

They issue decisions.

They make referrals.

They record incidents.

They create case notes.

They issue correspondence.

They maintain databases.

They receive complaints.

They make findings.

They decline findings.

They communicate between departments.

They retain administrative histories.

They have access to information that individuals often struggle to obtain.

For that reason, when a citizen spends decades reconstructing institutional interactions, the result can eventually become a documentary mirror.

The institution's own records become capable of being compared.

The chronology becomes capable of being reconstructed.

The administrative pathway becomes visible.

And the burden of explanation can no longer rest entirely upon the individual.

At some point, the question becomes reciprocal:

What do the institutions' own records say about what happened?

XXVI. THE ETHICAL POSITION

I do not ask the reader to assume that every allegation in this archive is true.

I ask for something more modest and more demanding.

Read the primary documents.

Check the dates.

Check the authorship.

Check the source.

Check whether the document is contemporaneous.

Check whether it is independently corroborated.

Check whether another institution records the same event.

Check whether the later explanation matches the earlier record.

Check whether the alleged detriment actually followed.

Check whether alternative explanations exist.

Check whether a court or tribunal has made a finding.

Check whether a matter remains unresolved.

Check what evidence is missing.

And then make your own assessment.

That is the ethical foundation of this archive.

XXVII. THE READER'S TASK

The reader is not asked to become my advocate.

The reader is not asked to become my opponent.

The reader is asked to become an investigator of the record.

Start with the chronology.

Then move to the primary documents.

Then compare the institutional responses.

Then examine contradictions.

Then examine the legal framework.

Then identify what is established.

Then identify what remains alleged.

Then identify what remains unresolved.

The archive should be approached with the same scepticism that should be applied to any large documentary collection.

Do not believe a claim merely because I make it.

Do not reject a claim merely because I make it.

Follow the evidence.

XXVIII. THE QUESTION OF RESPONSIBILITY

The archive does not claim that every adverse event has a single cause.

Nor does it claim that every person involved acted with the same purpose.

Responsibility may be:

- individual;
- institutional;
- administrative;
- systemic;
- accidental;
- negligent;
- contested;
- unresolved;
- or not established.

The evidence must determine which, if any, applies.

This is particularly important where public officials, politicians, police, lawyers, clinicians or other professionals are named.

The fact that a person held public office does not establish personal wrongdoing.

The fact that a person worked for an institution does not establish personal responsibility.

The fact that a decision caused harm does not automatically establish unlawful intent.

The fact that an allegation was made does not establish its truth.

The archive therefore preserves the difference between documented involvement and established culpability.

XXIX. THE PUBLIC RECORD AND THE POLITICAL RECORD

Where elected representatives, ministers or government offices appear in the archive, the relevant evidence should be examined in the same way.

A ministerial office may receive correspondence.

A politician may receive a complaint.

A department may respond.

A constituent may seek assistance.

A policy may affect an individual.

Those facts do not, without additional evidence, establish personal responsibility for every consequence.

Political accountability therefore belongs to the public record.

The relevant questions are:

- What was communicated?
- When was it communicated?
- To whom?
- What response was made?
- What authority did the recipient possess?
- What action was available?
- What action was actually taken?
- What evidence supports the claimed connection?
- What remains unresolved?

The reader can then assess the documentary record without being instructed what political conclusion to reach.

XXX. WHY THE ARCHIVE MATTERS

The importance of the archive is ultimately not whether it proves one person's interpretation of thirty-five years of history.

Its importance is that it prevents that history from existing only in memory.

Memory can be challenged.

Documents can also be challenged.

But documents can be examined.

They can be dated.

They can be authenticated.

They can be compared.

They can be contradicted.

They can be corroborated.

They can be independently investigated.

That is why preservation matters.

The archive attempts to convert an otherwise fragmented personal history into an auditable documentary chronology.

XXXI. THE DOCUMENTARY RECORD AS A PUBLIC RESOURCE

The archive should therefore be understood as having several simultaneous purposes.

Preservation

To prevent records from disappearing.

Documentation

To preserve the history of interactions with institutions.

Chronology

To reconstruct events in sequence.

Corroboration

To identify independent records supporting or contradicting testimony.

Accountability

To identify questions that remain unanswered.

Legal analysis

To identify potentially relevant legal frameworks without pretending that the archive itself determines liability.

Human-rights analysis

To identify questions concerning dignity, disability, equality, participation, safety and remedy.

Historical record

To preserve the experience of a person navigating multiple Australian institutions across decades.

Independent examination

To allow others to assess the evidence rather than relying exclusively upon the author's conclusions.

XXXII. THE RECORD THAT COULD NOT BE ERASED

There is a final inversion at the centre of this history.

If my account were merely an unsupported story, there would be little documentary material to examine.

But the historical record does exist.

It exists in correspondence.

It exists in government records.

It exists in legal records.

It exists in health records.

It exists in administrative decisions.

It exists in complaints.

It exists in responses.

It exists in requests.

It exists in refusals.

It exists in referrals.

It exists in the chronology.

It exists in the contradictions.

It exists in the unanswered questions.

And it exists in the institutions' own documents.

The repository now contains a substantial documentary architecture through which these materials can be examined. The main repository explicitly identifies its evidence stores, archive sections, reports, rendered documents, website mirror and preservation material.

(GitHub)

The archive therefore represents something more durable than a personal statement.

It represents a documentary challenge:

Do not ask merely what I say happened. Ask what the record shows happened.

XXXIII. THE MOMENT OF ACCOUNTABILITY

There is a point at which preservation becomes accountability.

Not because publication establishes guilt.

Not because accusation establishes truth.

Not because the archive itself possesses judicial authority.

But because once evidence has been preserved and made accessible, independent examination becomes possible.

The task is then straightforward.

Take the chronology.

Open the primary documents.

Check the dates.
Check the institutions.
Check the correspondence.
Check the decisions.
Check the reasons.
Check the contradictions.
Check the consequences.
Check the responses.
Check what was investigated.
Check what was not investigated.
Check what was acknowledged.
Check what was denied.
Check what remains unanswered.
Then ask the institutions the questions that the documents require.

XXXIV. THE FINAL PARADOX

The system demanded evidence.
I preserved it.
The system generated records.
I preserved those too.
The system required me to explain myself.
I documented the explanations.
The system created classifications.
I preserved the classifications.
The system created decisions.
I preserved the decisions.
The system created correspondence.
I preserved the correspondence.
The system created contradictions.
I preserved the contradictions.
The system created unanswered questions.
I preserved the unanswered questions.
The system told me, repeatedly, to prove what had happened.
I spent years doing exactly that.
And now the central evidentiary question is no longer simply whether I can produce evidence.
It is whether the institutions whose records comprise so much of that evidence are prepared to confront the complete documentary chronology.

That is the paradox.

That is the documentary trap.

And that is why the archive exists.

XXXV. THE READER'S TASK — NOW

Do not begin by believing me.

Begin with the documents.

Begin with the chronology.

Begin with the primary evidence.

Begin with the institutional correspondence.

Begin with the decisions.

Begin with the contradictions.

Begin with the records created by the institutions themselves.

Then ask:

What is established?

What is disputed?

What is alleged?

What is corroborated?

What remains unresolved?

What should have been investigated?

What was investigated?

What was never investigated?

What explanation is supported by the evidence?

What explanation is contradicted by the evidence?

And finally:

After more than three decades of institutional records, what does the documentary record itself require us to ask?

That is the question I leave with the reader.

XXXVI. THE ARCHIVE'S FINAL POSITION

I do not ask the reader to accept a predetermined verdict.

I ask for independent examination.

I do not ask institutions to accept my interpretation without scrutiny.
I ask them to confront the underlying records.
I do not ask that every allegation be accepted.
I ask that allegations capable of documentary testing be tested.
I do not ask that every administrative decision be condemned.
I ask that decisions be examined against the evidence available at the time.
I do not ask that every person named in this archive be blamed.
I ask that individual conduct be distinguished from institutional conduct and that both be assessed on evidence.
I do not ask for revenge.
I ask for accountability.
I do not ask for belief.
I ask for examination.
I do not ask for a predetermined conclusion.
I ask that the documentary record be allowed to speak.

XXXVII. THE DOCUMENTARY RECORD SPEAKS

For thirty-five years, the recurring instruction was:

Provide evidence.

I did.

The next instruction was:

Explain the evidence.

I did.

The next was:

Identify the institutions.

I did.

The next was:

Identify the dates.

I did.

The next was:

Identify the consequences.

I did.

The next was:

Identify the contradictions.

I did.

The next was:

Provide the documents.

I did.
And now the record is preserved.
The archive is public.
The evidence can be examined.
The chronology can be reconstructed.
The institutional responses can be compared.
The contradictions can be identified.
The unresolved questions can be stated.
The legal frameworks can be consulted.
And the reader can decide what the evidence establishes.
That is the point at which the burden changes.
Not from me to some predetermined defendant.
Not from allegation to automatic guilt.
But from assertion to examination.
From memory to record.
From fragmentation to chronology.
From private experience to public documentary history.
From "Believe me"
to
"Read the evidence."

XXXVIII. THE FINAL STATEMENT

I was told to prove it.
I kept the proof.
Much of that proof was generated by the institutions themselves.
I preserved the documents, the correspondence, the decisions, the contradictions, the chronology and the unanswered questions.
I did not preserve them to manufacture a verdict.
I preserved them so that a verdict need not be manufactured at all.
The record can now be examined.
The institutions can answer for their own records.
The documents can be tested.
The allegations can be tested.
My testimony can be tested.
The contradictions can be tested.
And where the evidence remains insufficient, that uncertainty should remain visible.
That is the standard.

That is the archive.

That is the documentary record.

And that is the documentary trap:

The system created the records through which the system can now be examined.

PRIMARY REPOSITORY ENTRY POINTS

Barran Dodger — primary evidence repository:

Open repository

Barran Dodger Archive — independent repository:

Open archive repository

Barran Dodger Backup — preservation mirror:

Open preservation repository

ACCOUNTABILITY, EVIDENCE AND FAIR DETERMINATION:

Open document

FORMAL REQUEST FOR INDEPENDENT INVESTIGATION ABLEPOINT:

Open document

FINAL EVIDENTIARY NOTICE, OBJECTION AND REQUEST FOR FORMAL INVESTIGATION:

Open document

Legal Brief — cumulative 35-year record:

Open document

35-Year Chronology:

Open chronology

Architecture of Administrative Erasure:

Open report

Institutional Response Map:

Open report

Contradictions, Discrepancies and Unanswered Questions:

Open report

Whistleblower Record:

Open report

Human Rights and Remedy:

Open report

Forensic Financial Record:

Open report

DOCUMENTARY CAUTION

This archive is a public documentary record, not a judicial determination.

The inclusion of a person, agency, organisation, profession or institution does not itself establish culpability.

The existence of a complaint does not itself establish the truth of the complaint.

The existence of correspondence does not itself establish agreement or coordination.

The existence of an adverse outcome does not itself establish unlawful causation.

The absence of an institutional response does not itself establish an admission.

Where the archive contains allegations, interpretations or conclusions that have not been independently determined, they should be read as such.

Where courts, tribunals or authorised bodies have made findings, those findings should be distinguished from the author's interpretation.

Where uncertainty remains, uncertainty should remain part of the record.

The purpose is preservation, transparency, accountability and independent examination — not the manufacture of a predetermined conclusion.

The record should speak for itself.

This version incorporates the repository material I could actually verify, including direct links to the principal evidence files and the eight-report documentary series. The repository itself confirms that its official-drive material is preserved as the author's copies and expressly distinguishes those copies from court findings, which is why I have retained that evidentiary distinction throughout.