Find out how the NDIS was created and set up in Victoria and who supported the transition.

Under the NDIS, around 105,000 Victorians will get access to disability services.

The NDIS in Victoria is jointly funded by the Victorian and Commonwealth Governments:

- Victoria will invest $2.5 billion a year in the NDIS
- the Commonwealth Government will also contribute $2.6 billion a year and any additional costs

The NDIS is now available in the whole of Victoria.

To find out where you can access the NDIS go to the NDIS rollout website or call the NDIS on 18 00 800 110.

Background

The NDIS in Victoria began with a trial in the Barwon area in 2013. The Victorian and Commonwealth Governments signed a bilateral agreement for transition to the NDIS in 2015. From this agreement the NDIS started a staged rollout in Victoria in 2016.

Initial bilateral agreements

There were initially 2 bilateral agreements between the Commonwealth and Victoria.

- Transition to a National Disability Insurance Scheme – outlined how the NDIS would roll out in Victoria over 3 transition years, including the participant phasing schedule.
- Transitioning Responsibilities for Aged Care and Disability Services – outlined the agreed split in responsibilities. The Commonwealth took responsibility for people 65 years and over. Victoria took responsibility for people under 65.

The 2019 bilateral agreement

The NDIS full scheme agreement between the Commonwealth and Victoria took effect as of 1 July 2019. This provides long-term commitment to the NDIS from the Victorian and Commonwealth governments.

During 2019-20, Victoria will contribute $2.52 billion to the NDIS. The Commonwealth will pay the balance of all scheme costs for Victorian participants.

The Victorian Government will continue to support the NDIS transition beyond 30 June 2019.

As part of the agreement, a Victorian Community Advisory Council will be set up.

Victorian Government investment

The Victorian Government invested over $40 million for the Transition Support Package. 22 organisations are currently funded representing people with disability and their families, service providers, and workforces.

We have also invested $26 million to transform the disability workforce in Victoria as part of the transition to the NDIS (includes $4.88 million provided by the Commonwealth Government's NDIS Sector Development Fund).

The Victorian Government established the NDIS Implementation Taskforce.
